This is the question that A Novel With Three Codas, the Hugo Award-winning novel by Samuel R. Delany, explores. The novel follows the lives of three people who are trying to find their way in a world that is constantly changing.

There's George, a young man who has just graduated from college and is trying to find his place in the world. He's intelligent and ambitious, but he's also idealistic and naive. He believes that he can make a difference in the world, but he soon learns that the world is a more complicated place than he thought.

Then there's Irene, a middle-aged woman who has been living in the same apartment for decades. She's intelligent and independent, but she's also lonely and isolated. She longs for connection, but she's afraid of getting hurt.

And finally, there's Robert, an elderly man who has seen it all. He's wise and experienced, but he's also tired and disillusioned. He's seen the world change for the worse, and he's not sure if there's any hope for the future.

The lives of these three characters intersect in unexpected ways, and they soon learn that they have more in common than they thought. They all want to find meaning in their lives, and they all want to connect with each other. But in a world where technology has advanced to the point where people can live forever, is it even possible to find meaning and connection?

A Novel With Three Codas is a complex and challenging novel, but it's also a rewarding one. Delany's writing is beautiful and thought-provoking, and he creates characters that are both relatable and unforgettable. This is a novel that will stay with you long after you finish reading it.
