Zimmerman's stories are a haunting blend of mystery, thriller, and suspense. His characters are complex and flawed, drawn into dangerous and desperate situations. The settings are often dark and atmospheric, creating a sense of unease and foreboding.

In "The Man Who Collected Shadows," a man becomes obsessed with collecting the shadows of people he meets. As his collection grows, he begins to notice strange and disturbing changes in his own life.

In "The House on Maple Street," a young couple moves into a seemingly idyllic home. But soon, they begin to experience strange occurrences that make them question their sanity.

In "The Girl Who Could See Ghosts," a young girl with a troubled past discovers that she has the ability to see ghosts. As she tries to use her gift to help others, she soon realizes that she has become a target for evil forces.

'Down These Dark Streets' is a collection of stories that will haunt you long after you finish reading them. Zimmerman's masterful storytelling and vivid imagination will transport you to a world where the shadows are always lurking and the darkness is never far away.
