Growing Up Transgender

Jazz was born in 2000 to Greg and Jeanette Jennings. From a young age, Jazz displayed feminine behavior and interests. She preferred to play with dolls and dress up in女の子's clothing. Her parents were supportive of Jazz's gender identity, but they also knew that she would face challenges in the world.

In kindergarten, Jazz began socially transitioning to live as a girl. She started wearing girls' clothing and using the name Jazz. She also began hormone therapy to help her body develop more feminine features.

Jazz's transition was not without its challenges. She faced discrimination and bullying from classmates and even some teachers. But Jazz refused to let the negativity stop her from living her true self.

With the support of her family and friends, Jazz continued to transition and advocate for transgender rights. She became a spokesperson for the Transgender Youth Equality Foundation and has spoken out against discrimination against transgender people.

Excerpt

"I am the only girl in the world who looks like me. I am transgender. I was born a boy, but I always knew I was a girl.

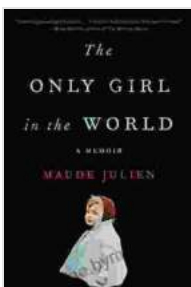

I started transitioning to live as my true self when I was four years old. I started wearing girls' clothing and using the name Jazz. I also began hormone therapy to help my body develop more feminine features.

My transition has not been without its challenges. I have faced discrimination and bullying from classmates and even some teachers. But I have refused to let the negativity stop me from living my true self.

I am proud to be transgender. I am proud to be the only girl in the world who looks like me. I am living proof that you can be anything you want to be, no matter what anyone else says."
